CONSENT FOR COMMUNICATIONS SECURITY MONITORING

1. As part of the Agency's communications security (COMSEC) program, equipment and systems used for official communications are routinely surveyed to determine the degree of communications security being provided. Even though such surveys are not conducted with the object of monitoring the communications per se, it is possible that during the course of COMSEC surveys conversations or transmissions between individuals may be overheard.

2. Under the circumstances described above, national guidelines for the conduct of communications security activities and Agency procedures relating to electronic surveillance require the consent of users of communications systems. Accordingly, all personnel are hereby notified that official Agency communications systems (including but not necessarily limited to secure voice systems, the red line telephone, facsimile systems, and data and teletype systems) are subject to COMSEC monitoring and that use of these systems constitutes consent to such monitoring.
